Rota's Academic Skills Learning Center expands base educational opportunities

CECN(SW) John Little has been using the Academic Skills Learning Center for the past three weeks in preparation for a CLEP exam in Math 107. Little works in the Energy Division of Public Works.

Sgt. Patricia Butler

You can improve your academic skills for free at the Academic Skills Learning Center. So why aren't more people taking advantage of this educational opportunity? "Our goal is to have 75 percent usage and right now we're operating at about 30 percent," said Catherine Bird, ASLC Facilitator.

"I think some people have the idea that the center is only for basic skills and that we don't offer anything more. I think that's a big misperception that people have," she said.

The ASLC provides a comfortable environment to help prepare you for reaching your academic goals. "It's a way to improve your skills to prepare for college, to prepare for advancement or to prepare for your ASVAB, GED or other exams," said Karen Melvin, ASLC Facilitator.

The ASLC offers free self-paced instruction to all active duty personnel, reservists, retirees, DoD civilians and adult family members. "We have a variety of courses including language arts, reading, mathematics, social sciences and humanities. A lot of people study here for CLEP exams for college credit at Navy Campus," said Melvin.

All of the course work at the ASLC is done on a computer by using PLATO software. The curriculum is interactive. "Everything is set up so that you do a tutorial, which is actually the instruction phase of the course, and then you have some practice questions and then you can take the master test to advance to the next level. Each course has a variety of levels that you have to go through to finish it," said Melvin. When you have completed each level you will receive a certificate of completion to add to your personnel record.

"Most of our students that come in are at different education levels, therefore every student takes an assessment test before they begin the tutorial. That way the program can assess what the student already knows and what the program needs to teach them," said

Camp Adventure tours VQ-2 squadron

More than 75 children and counselors from Camp Adventure spent Aug. 19 donning aircrew survival gear, checking out the cockpit in the EP-3E aircraft, and pushing buttons on equipment consoles as part of their annual visit to the Rota's VQ-2 squadron.

The purpose of the visit was to familiarize the children with the naval aviation community, and VQ-2's unique and important role. For most, it was their first visit to a military squadron, and an exciting visit for all participants — young and old alike.

The squadron went all out for the visit, utilizing Ranger 24, one of the mission aircraft operated by VQ-2 for a static display. Once inside the aircraft, the children sat in the cockpit under the watchful eye of Lt. j.g. Todd Faurot, one of VQ-2's pilots; and flipped switches on the many displays in the back of the aircraft, accompanied VQ-2's Lt.

Chad Christensen.

Outside the aircraft, the "PR" shop (for parachute rigger) was busy teaching the children about aircrew survival equipment. Responsible for maintaining all aircrew equipment and survival gear, the PRs provided an excellent hands-on display of various helmets, survival vests, sonobuoys and emergency radio equipment. Moped registration changes

JOC Jon McMillan

Procedures for registering mopeds here have changed. Spain is now requiring all new mopeds to be registered with the Traffic Bureau instead of a town's City Hall. Used mopeds will also have to register with the traffic bureau but will have up to May 2002 to do so, depending on their municipal license plate number.

"The process is not that bad," said Lt. Colleen Glaser-Allen, asst. base staff judge advocate, and the first person to go through the new registration process. "The guys at Security have been great. They do most of the leg-work and they're walking me through the whole process," she said.

Moped dealers can complete registration procedures prior to delivering a new moped, said a Security document released last week. It will cost 2,575 pts. plus a service fee similar to ones levied when purchasing a motorcycle or car. The service fee varies from dealer to dealer.

If a buyer wants to save some pesetas, they can do the paperwork themselves, with help from Security, and register their new moped at a Gestoria of their choice. The Rota Gestoria is charging 3,000 pts., according to the Security document.

Once this process is completed, owners can then register their moped with Security's Vehicle Registration section in building 52.

The process for registering a used moped is slightly different. The first step is to find out the moped's status. If it has not been registered at any City Hall, the used moped must be registered at the Traffic Bureau no later than January 27, 2000.

If the used moped has been registered at a City Hall and has a municipal license plate, it will also have to be re-registered at the Traffic Bureau. The Spanish government has established a timetable based on the moped's license plate number. See chart for details.

According to the Security document, Spanish authorities will strictly follow the indicated time limits for used moped registration. "[The time line] will not be brought forward or backward, except when the applicant owns several mopeds," the document stated. If someone owns several mopeds, they will be able to register all their mopeds at one time. If a base resident owns a moped with municipal tags, Security Vehicle registration will assist owners with the required paperwork.

The document stated that Security will send letters people who have mopeds registered with them to remind them of their obligation to comply with the new law.

This law was passed by Royal Decree December 1998 and went into effect July 27, 1999. Forward questions to the Asst. Security Officer for Administration.

Bird.

The facilitators say that no one should feel intimidated about coming in to improve their skills. "Sometimes I think that we're not willing to admit that we have some weaknesses in our writing skills or our math skills," said Bird. "Because we don't use certain skills everyday, for example, in math, a lot of people forget. When they do the assessment test they assess at the level where you start reviewing fractions because we don't use fractions on a daily basis. That's completely normal," said Bird.

The ASLC offers test preparation for the ASVAB, GED, SAT, ACT and CLEP exams. In addition, you can study for job preparation, life skills and work skills.

"I think the students really feel a great sense of accomplishment when they finish because they realize that even though they may have forgotten some skills, they really do know the material. I think they go away knowing that they're better educated and better prepared," said Melvin.

Bird said she encourages everyone to come on in and check it out. "It's free. You can't lose anything by coming in here and giving it a chance. It's the only free educational resource that we have available on base. Take advantage of it, especially for the CLEP and DANTES examinations. Prepare here for free. Take the test and get college credit for work you did here on your own."

She added that active duty personnel have a lot of incentive to complete computer based education programs such as those available at the ASLC, to increase their chances for promotion. "Please come in and give it a chance. Just spend ten minutes with us so we can explain the curriculum and sit down with you at the computer and see for yourself. It's very step-by-step and very easy to follow, it's nothing to be intimidated by," said Bird.

The ASLC is a tool to help build your confidence. The facilitators work with students to answer questions about the curriculum or to assist with computer problems. You must be at least 19 years old or have a high school diploma to use one of the 8 computer workstations at the center. To become another ASLC success story, stop by the center Monday-Friday from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m., or call them at 3070 to get started.

Navy Europe aids Turkey relief effort

The U.S. Navy sent a special medical team to Turkey Thursday to provide much-needed medical assistance to the victims of Tuesday's earthquake.

U.S. Naval Forces Europe (CINCUSNAVEUR) sent the team of medical personnel from Naples, Italy, according to Capt. Tom Sizemore, Fleet Medical Officer for CINCUSNAVEUR. This support is at the request of U.S. European Command and the Department of State.

The NAVEUR Surgical Response Team (SRT) departed Thursday afternoon from Naples, Italy, onboard a U.S. Air Force C-141 bound for Istanbul, Turkey.

The SRT is comprised of 22 people, 20 from Naval Hospital Naples, including doctors, nurses and corpsmen, and an oral surgeon and a dental technician from Naval Dental Clinics Europe, Branch Dental Clinic, Naples.

"The aircraft will be carrying 27,000 pounds of medical gear that includes self support gear such as tents and water and MREs [meals ready to eat]," Sizemore said. "Included in this package are surgical supplies, anesthesia machines, intravenous meds and fluids to perform surgery and to treat orthopedic injuries, facial trauma and other injuries."

Typically an SRT is equipped to be self-supportive for a month. "NAVEUR Logistics has the responsibility of resupplying them as necessary," Sizemore said. "If they are needed for a longer period of time,

Crew members of USS Kearsarge (LHD 3) line up for a special check of their vaccination records on Sunday, Aug. 22, 1999, as the ship got closer to Turkey. The three-ship Kearsarge Amphibious Readiness Group is under way to Izmit, Turkey to aid victims of the recent earthquake.

they will be resupplied."

"We are anxious to provide medical help in any way we can to the people of Turkey," said Sizemore. "This is an unfortunate but unique opportunity to come to our allies at their time of need."

"This is the first non-exercise, real-world deployment of the NAVEUR surgical response team," Sizemore added. "They just returned from MEDCEUR [Medical Exercise in Central and Eastern Europe 99-2] in Latvia. They're well trained and ready to go!"

a volunteer assisting the PR shop, found the children excited by all the equipment, and thought it comical to see the children struggle into and out of the oversized vests and helmets.

In the VQ-2 training annex, the children were treated to a display of some of the equipment used in the back of the plane. AT1(NAC/AW) Samuel O'Conner provided a fun, interesting brief for the children on how the aircraft and crew do the reconnaissance mission.

At the end of the visit, a group photo was taken in front of the large VQ-2 hangar. The children then departed, closing another successful visit by Camp Adventure to VQ-2.

VQ-2 would like to thank Camp Adventure for their interest in visiting the squadron, and extends a special thanks to AE1(NAC/AW) Sam Scimeca, all the squadron volunteers, and camp counselors for a smooth, safe visit.

Small children like to play peek-a-boo. When they cover their eyes they think that they—and you—disappear. If a child can't see it, it doesn't exist.

That's why when mom or dad leave the room the child starts crying. The parent might be just around the corner. But because the child can't see them, they don't exist. And since it's not a game, it's no laughing matter. Psychologists call this separation anxiety.

Children fear being left alone.

You know, we never really lose that fear of being left alone. Oh sure, we learn that people don't disappear just because we cover our eyes. Or when they leave for work or deployment, they will come back again.

But even as big boys and girls one of our greatest fears is that of being alone, and becoming lonely. "Does anyone know who I am?" "Does anyone care about me?" "When I can't see around the corner, is there anyone there to watch out for me?"

There is!

The Bible says that there is not a single sparrow that falls to the ground that God doesn't see. And how much more than a sparrow, does He care about you and me? Even though you don't see him, he sees and cares for you.

There was a fire and a child trapped in the upstairs bedroom. His father was down below, in the yard, through the smoke. He yelled up, "Son, jump out the window. I'll catch you". "But daddy, I can't see you!" "It's all right son, I can see you."

Look around. Are you still alone?

A day in Ubrique

Luis Paredes

Have you ever admired other people's $400 leather jackets, $100 leather boots. How would you like to own your own for almost less than half that price? Well, you can, because most of the upscale leather products sold by companies like Christian Dior are made in Ubrique, Spain.

Ubrique is one of the largest producers of leather in Andalucia and exports its goods around the world to countries like Canada, USA and Japan.

Ubrique is located about two hours away from Rota. Surrounded by mountains, it is one of the more famous "white towns," known for its whitewashed buildings and picturesque scenery.

ROTA COASTLINE

There are dozens of leather shops around Ubrique. Most are located on the street Dr. Solis Pasqual and on Avenida de Espana. You'll find items like wallets, belts, jackets, novelty items like key chains and even leather umbrellas in the shops – all at reasonable prices. Don't worry about the language barrier, most of the storekeepers speak English.

Be sure to try on the belts, shoes and jackets because European sizes are slightly different than U.S. sizes. If you buy too much to carry, there's even a UPS in Ubrique so you can ship all the stuff you bought.

If you go, take the time to explore the town, meet the people and walk around. Take in all the sights, enjoy yourself and shop!

ITT has regular trips to Ubrique each month, so if you want to get there and do some shopping without having to drive, call ITT at ext. 3101 and they'll take you there. The next trip is on Wed., Sept. 1.

Publisher's Corner

Karen Lucas

Here it is, almost the end of August. School starts next week at DGF and Labor Day which signals the end of summer for most Americans is just around the corner! Actually, I'm sure most of you that have been here for over a year, are looking forward to the end of the big onslaught of out-of-towners. We will now be able to enjoy things around here without having to fight the crowds all the time.

This week's Vista focuses on the city of Puerto de Santa María, a sprawling city that reaches from the base, down the coast and across the Guadalete River. Its population is somewhere between 75,000 and 80,000, but I've heard reports that this summer the population is close to 200,000 people. If one considers that hotels are at 100% occupancy and all the houses and apartments that have been built in the last year or so, I guess it is not surprising. This week there are more ads from Puerto than on the average week. I am going to name each one, starting with those closest to the base and summarize their offering in a few words. Café Tropical, in Fuentebravía, right next to the bread shop, offers coffee, pastries, ice creams and sandwiches. El Cañaveral is a residential development that has attached houses for sale. El Faisan, lovely restaurant with a varied cuisine, nice garden and paddle court. Los Jándalos, an aparthotel located at the entrance to Vistahermosa. El Horno de Leña, located right across from the English Centre, offers Italian food; especially good is their pizza and lasagna. They have a wonderful garden for outdoor eating. If we take a left at the circle immediately following El Horno de Leña, we'll come to the Restaurante Bar Jamón where you can enjoy their wonderful pan de la casa (toasted bread with olive oil and ham), great revueltos (scrambled egg dishes) and much, much more. Back to the old Rota - Puerto road, Harley Davidson and 24 Hour Diner are both located at the gas station that is on both sides of the road as you enter Puerto de Santa María proper. The Harley Shops sells motorcycles and all the accessories and gift items, the Diner is styled after an American diner and offers the typical fares. Restaurante El Ancla is located on Avda. De la Libertad, not far from and to the right of the hospital. They offer creative cuisine; especially good is their salt baked fish. Farther down the same street, we'll find La Vieja Buhardilla, on our right. They have auxiliary rustic style and wrought iron furniture and decorative items. If we continue down this street, we will come to Puerto Sherry where the Scuba Diving Club Bahía has their headquarters. They give classes and organize diving trips as well as whale and dolphin sighting trips. Going in the opposite direction, on the Sanlúcar road, right before the overpass and the fair grounds, is Venta La Feria. Here you will find authentic paella valenciana and other typical rice dishes from the Valencia area. They know how to make it because they are from there. In downtown Puerto, on Avenida Bajamar, we'll find the Irish bar Rí Rá that offers the best brews and good company. Almost right behind it on the street Micaela Aramburu, is Mi Bodega, a wonderful little wine shop full of a great selection of wines and gift items. Another street over and back, we'll find the German Beerstube with the best beers and German food. Continuing towards the train station, we'll find the restaurant Los Portales, known for its seafood. Worth special mention are their shrimp with béchamel. A little further on is the Italian restaurant Pasta Gansa. The setting is wonderful - in an old palace. Their veal merits special mention. La Casa de Mimbres, (The Rattan House), located right across from the train station, features rattan and cane furniture, rugs, blinds and gift items. Across the river, in the part of town known as Valdelagrana, is Restaurante San José. Here you will find a fabulous all-you-can-eat buffet on weekends and Spanish holidays.

Summer sales are about over at El Paseo and elsewhere. Most sales will end by the end of this month, so hurry if you still want to get some of the good deals. El Paseo will be hosting an exhibit of "cars of the future" starting tomorrow and running through September 5th.

There is a polo tournament coming up in Jerez. It will be held September 2nd, 3rd, 4th and 5th in the Chapín stadium. Jerez was one of the original promoters of polo in Europe and the city has decided to bring it back. Teams such as the Outback from the U.S. and the Black Bears from England, as well as teams from Australia and Argentina will participate. Entrance is free.

A friend of mine told me that his credit card was recently billed some 14,000 pesetas for internet use by Omeganet. Omeganet sold out to Teleline about a year ago and no longer exists. The credit card company removed the charge immediately when he notified them, but perhaps those of you that paid Omeganet by credit card should be on the look-out.

Here is something I meant to mention last week and forgot. I've had a couple inquiries about the existence of a vegetarian restaurant in Gibraltar and so far I have not located one, however The Viceroy of India has a nice selection of vegetarian dishes. If anyone out there knows of a vegetarian restaurant in Gib or anywhere nearby, pass it on.

Let's hear from you! It is time for me to start preparing a new restaurant guide so I would greatly appreciate any inputs about places you think are good, especially those from the surrounding area. Send your inputs by fax to 956-542997 or e-mail to COASTPUB@santandersupernet.com

Go digital!

Putting that old 35mm camera to bed

Digital photography is rapidly becoming the preferred method of "capturing the moment" in the professional field of photography and for home users alike. Traditional "wet-processed" film has many draw backs and few benefits; benefits which digital photography is quickly closing the gap on.

You could talk techno garble until you're blue in the face and there will always be the purist who won't make the switch to digital. Image quality has always been lower with digital images, but even the sharpest eye will have trouble deciphering today technology and traditional 35mm photographs.

Price has been the biggest limited factor of digital imagery for the vast majority, but with digital cameras in the $300-range, that excuse is slowly fading. For the average "happy snapper" out to catch a candid moment at the command picnic or holiday gala, the decision has recently become much easier to go digital.

Digital cameras can be broken into roughly three price ranges. Entry-level from $300-$1,000; mid-range home office from about $1,000-$2,000; and professional starting around $7,000 and running up to $25,000 plus. The gap between midrange and professional is slowly being filled with some incredible cameras and breaking technology that may put their more expensive cousins in the professional range out of business.

Novice cameras with point-and-shoot technology starts around $300. Obviously, as with any electronics product, you'll find a cheaper price everyday. A good place to start looking is the Internet. If you are skeptical of shopping over the Internet, use it as an information guide and not a store; it is hands down the most useful tool for comparing products.

This article will address the home user; targeted in the $300-$1,000 price range. While discussion of specific brands and models will be avoided, the terminology is universal.

One of the biggest selling points for digital photography is its immediacy and inherent ability for quick processing. Translation: Uncle Jed and Aunt Betsy in Indiana can enjoy pictures of your birthday party in Rota almost as it's happening. If that's your target medium, the computer screen, you have just made it your camera hunt a whole lot cheaper. The vast majority of home computer's monitors are set to display a resolution of 640x480 pixels or 600x800 pixels (we'll take briefly about resolution later). The most basic cameras display 640x480. If you intend to email photos to family, store them in a digital photo book, or set them as your desktop wallpaper, stick with the less expensive cameras; you will save yourself a lot of grief and hard earned pennies down the road.

If you intend to print photos — and want them to be at least photo-realistic (a term coined for almost like a photo, but primarily a great sounding phrase in a marketing campaign), then you're going to want to buck up a few more pesetas for a mega-pixel camera. Better cameras, those with 1 million or more pixels are called megapixel cameras and those with over 2-million are called multi-megapixel cameras. Even the most expensive professional digital cameras give you only about 6-million pixels. As you might expect, all other things being equal, costs rise with the camera's resolution. Some camera manufacturers will play a trick on words making it sound like the camera is mega-pixel by saturating the ad with the word mega, but megapixel means it will capture 1 million pixels per image. That's the quality you need to produce a digital image that are very close to a photo. How close? That's open for interpretation. The best thing is to get a sample image from the manufacture. Most will send you examples if you ask. Keep in mind, you can have the most incredible camera, but with out a printer that can keep up, you're wasting ink.

If you enlarge any digital image enough, the pixels will begin to show—a process called pixelization (see example A). This is akin to traditional prints where grain begins to show when prints are enlarged past a certain point.

The quality of any digital image, whether printed or displayed on a screen, depends in part on its resolution—the number of pixels used to create the image. More and smaller pixels add detail and sharpen edges. There are three ways to express the resolution of an image; by its dimensions in pixels, by the total number of pixels, or by the pixels per inch (ppi) or dots per inch (dpi). For example, your TV's resolution is about 325x500, or 168,000 pixels. The human eye registers about 120 million pixel (if it could be expressed that way). A traditional 35mm slide is arguably any where from 5 - 80 million pixels. Why the wide range? Traditional photos just don't have pixels. "The Industry" tries to equate grain to pixels — really not the best translations as one film to another can vary so widely in ISO rating, the closest relation to image quality, or resolution.

Beware of claims about resolution for cameras because there are two kinds; optical and interpolated. The optical resolution of a camera, or scanner for that matter, is an absolute number because an image sensor's photosites (techno garble) are physical devices that can be counted.

To improve resolution in certain limited respects, the resolution can be increased using software. This process, called interpolated resolution, adds pixels to the image. Interpolation makes a computer guess what the image would look like if it had a higher resolution. Software evaluates those pixels surrounding each new pixel to determine what its colors should be. For example, if all of the pixels around a newly inserted pixel are red, the new pixel will be made red. What's important to keep in mind is that interpolated resolution doesn't add any new information to the image—it just adds pixels and makes the file larger. Basically: Interpolation = bad. Yes, there are advantages, but for the most part it degrades the quality of an image (see example B). Beware of companies that promote or emphasize their device's interpolated (or enhanced) resolution. You're getting less than you think you are. Always check for the device's optical resolution. If this isn't provided, flee the product—you're dealing with marketing people who don't have your best interests at heart.

Size isn't everything! The higher a camera's resolution, the larger the image files that it creates. For this reason, some cameras allow you to specify more than one resolution when you take a picture. Although you are likely to get better results with a higher resolution, it isn't always needed—especially when the image is going to be displayed on the Web, as we talked about earlier, or printed very small. In these cases lower resolution images will suffice and because they have smaller file sizes, you'll be able to squeeze more into the camera's memory.

The final size of an image depends on the resolution of the output device. Imagine laying two tile floors, one with large tiles and one with small. The one with small tiles will have sharper curves and more detail. However, if you have the same number of large and small tiles, the area covered by the small tiles will be much less.

An image with 768 x 512 pixels will just fit on the screen set to a resolution of 800 x 600. It will be displayed a little over 10 x 7 inches—about the size of a magazine page. That same image, printed on a 300 dpi printer shrinks to about 2.5 by 1.7 inches. On a 1500 dpi printer, the same image shrinks to a size smaller than a stamp.

Digital photography takes the fear of photography away from many. Hand the camera to the kids, take weird and unusual angles, shoot without looking through the viewfinder, and ignore all previously held conceptions about how to take images. If you don't like the shot... just delete it! You may be surprised at the images you get if you exploit this new era of uninhibited shooting. Look in next week's Coastline for a wrap up of this article.

Tickets, tickets get your tickets here

What's on the menu? Well, in case you haven't purchased your lunch tickets for school, there may not be much of a choice. Classes for the DGF Elementary and High School begin Monday, and you need tickets to get the mid-day meals. In case you haven't purchased your child's tickets yet, here's the process to help avoid the rush.

The tickets can be purchased at one of the following five locations during their normal operating hours: NEX Admin; NEX Main Store; Navy Lodge; Video Mart; and the Housing Quick Stop.

Ticket prices for Elementary are $19.50 book of ten at regular price and $4 per book at reduced rate. High School regular price is $21 per book of ten and the reduced price is $4.00 book of ten.

The reduced and free tickets can only be picked up at the NEX Admin Office. The regular-priced tickets can be purchased at any location. Also, you are limited to receiving only a month's supply of the free tickets at your time of pickup.

If you'd like more information about how to qualify for the free or reduced meal program, contact UTCS Vince Patton, DGF Schools Officer, at ext. 4444.

EL PUERTO

Photos and text by JOC Jon McMillan

Sitting in our backyard, El Puerto de Santa Maria is sometimes forgotten when that question arises, "What shall we do this weekend?" But this city of around 60,000 has a lot more to offer than Pyrcia. From the beautiful marina at Puerto Sherry to the Miami-esque Valdelagrana district to the busy downtown district, El Puerto offers something for everyone.

Situated in the center of the Bay of Cádiz, remains from Lower Paleolithic-era settlements have been found here. The city's foundation is attributed in legend to the Athenian warrior-leader Menestheo, who was to be followed by Romans, Visigoths and Arabs. The town was a temporary home to Columbus as well as being the place where Juan de la Cosa drew his Mapa Mundi.

Principle sites in El Puerto include the 13th-century Castillo San Marcos. This castle almost looks fake because of its downtown location and remarkable condition. It's not fake though, and tours are given on Saturdays.

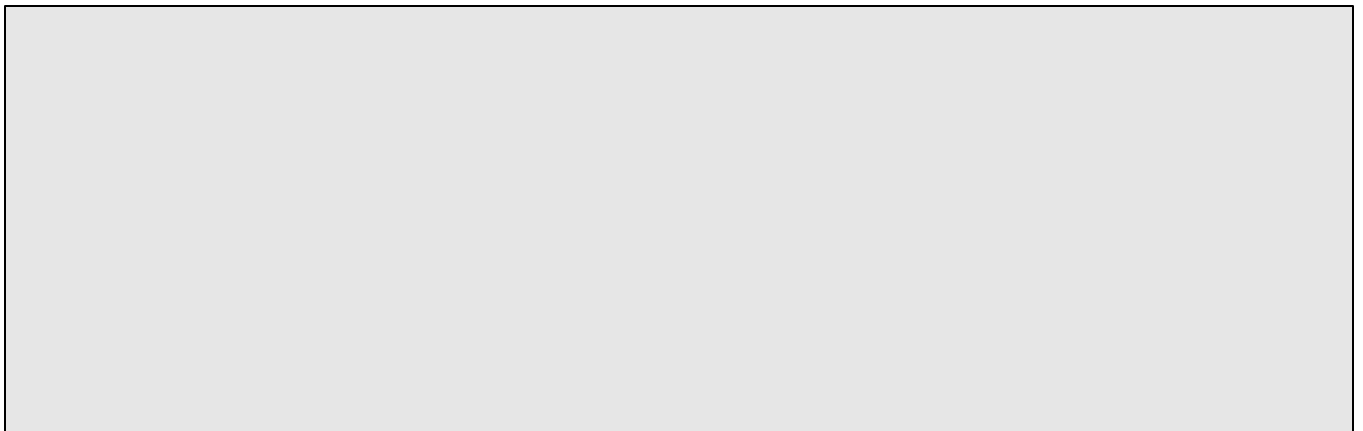

Another beautiful site is the Iglesia Mayor Prioral. This 13th-century gothic church is beautiful. It sits in the Plaza Mayor and is a popular place for Spaniards to wed. Other sites include the Monasterio de la Victoria, from the 16th-century, the Convento de los Capuchinos from the 17th-century and the Palacios de Inblusqueta.

One of the most popular sites at El Puerto is its bullring. This Plaza de Toros is one of the largest and most important in Spain.

Even though the city is located in our backyard, it has a lot to offer. Downtown El Puerto offers great restaurants, shops, cafés and bars and the city has a much different atmosphere than Rota. Head out for a day and experience it. Contact base community relations at 2813 or stop by the tourist office for more details.

New Parent Support program offered

Unfortunately, babies don't come with instructions! Many people begin the job of parenting armed with enthusiasm, high hopes, and parenting skills, yet they may not be ready for the tremendous demands that caring for a young child can impose.

New Parent Support (NPS), located at the Navy Family Service Center, can help. NPS provides a voluntary, no-cost program for expectant and new parents. Services include: health education, infant/toddler growth and development information, a resource library, connections with community resources, prenatal/postnatal home visits, parenting workshops, and a Parents and Tots play group.

For more program information, contact the Navy Family Service Center at 3232.

Rota ball players go to camp

Kyle Howell

Shane Athans

Shane Athans and Kyle Howell recently completed a two-week session of intensive baseball training at Mickey Owen Baseball Scoll near Miller, MO.

During their stay, the two students received training in all phases of baseball through instruction and game experience. The training camp included 15 to 20 games in the two-week stay, incorporating video tape replay and training from the camp's instructors.

Chiefs, Chiefs-to-be go head to head

Sgt. Patricia Butler

The annual CPO selectee picnic that took place Saturday. The fun and games included a softball game between the CPO selectees and the "Real Chiefs." Some of the rules, as determined by the unbiased umpire, include coming to attention whenever a "Real Chief" calls a time out and CPO selectees running to first base facing backwards in the event that they hit the ball. ADC(AW) Jeffery Brewer, DCCS(SW) Mike Westendorf and BMC(SEAL) Select Tony Anthony at the plate.

SPORTS TALK

with Russ Gambrel

So both the Magic and Bulls have cleaned out their entire rosters to make room for Tim Duncan. The powers that be in both those organizations are willing to lay down for an entire year for a shot at the NBA's best player. Are you kidding me? How bad has it gotten that a team is now willing to give up on an entire season to pursue a free agent? Keep in mind, this is nothing like a last-place team trading away its best pitcher at the all-star break. This is a team-months before training camp starts-saying "we will not be trying to win this season". You wanna be a season-ticketholder in Orlando or Chicago next year? At full-price? Neither of these organizations deserves the fans they've got. Let's roll...

Even though I could talk baseball for six more columns, my buddies are gonna take a ratchet to my head if I don't get around to football. Of course, I have to start with the fifty-six million-dollar punk. If you will recall, about this time last year I was ripping into the Chargers for giving Leaf $56 million. I think I talked about how a contract that big would swallow an immature jerk like Ryan Leaf. Well, the jury is no longer out. It's official; Ryan Leaf is the worst NFL draft pick in the history of professional football. My apologies to the former holder of this distinction. At least Tony Mandarich had a few sub-mediocre starts in him.

I'm pretty stoked about the upcoming NFL season. Y'know why? The field is W-I-D-E-O-P-E-N. There are simply no undisputed favorites. Denver's good, but no one is betting the farm on them without Elway. And while Minnesota looks stacked on paper and on film, Randall Cunningham has never been one to put back-to-back Pro Bowl seasons together. If you ask me, the Vikings ditched the wrong QB. The prevailing wisdom says to dump your stars right before they tee off on the back nine of their career. Cunningham is a big risk and would have fetched a lot of draft picks. Furthermore, Brad Johnson's young AND proven. Mark my words: He'll take the Redskins to the Super Bowl in the next three years.

One guy who won't be playing football on January 30th, 2000 is Jamal Anderson. Dan Reeves cannot possibly motivate the Falcons into another Super Bowl. They're just not that good and he's just that bad (Sorry folks, never been a fan of Dan). Anderson's hold-out was not overlooked by his 14 teammates who showed up for camp despite being in contract years as well. I don't even see a play-off spot for Atlanta.

As for the AFC, I'm bullish on Jax, Indy (don't laugh) and the Jets. Parcells never ceases to amaze me. When it comes to football talent, the guy somehow manages to get blood from a stone every year. Testeverde is just another in a long line of Parcells' over-achievers. Trade him to any other team and he stinks up the place. On the topic of great coaches...

Marino and the Dolphins are finally gonna get back to the Super Bowl. I'm so sure of this that I'm almost willing to cover your bets if they don't. Almost.

See ya next week...
